

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

A. Conclusion

Based on the results of research and discussion regarding the use of Artificial Intelligence (AI)-based translation tools on the accuracy of students' writing, the following conclusions can be drawn:

1. The use of AI-based translation tools supports students' writing accuracy.

AI-based translation tools help students improve their writing, particularly in grammar, vocabulary, sentence structure, and sentence construction. Chat GPT is useful for grammar correction, sentence construction, and developing ideas, while Deep L is more useful for direct translation and lexical accuracy.

2. Students show positive and critical responses toward the use of AI-based translation tools. Students generally respond positively because AI helps them construct correct sentences, improve grammar, and enrich vocabulary. However, students also experience difficulties, especially in understanding context and choosing appropriate words.

3. The use of AI also has some negative effects on students' writing independence. Excessive use of AI may cause dependency, direct copy-paste behavior, and reduced confidence in writing independently. Therefore, students should not rely entirely on AI when completing writing tasks.

4. Students need to use AI critically and responsibly. Students should check, analyze, and revise AI-generated translations before using them in their writing, especially because AI may produce errors in meaning or context. Teacher guidance is also important so that AI functions as a learning aid rather than replacing students' own language skills.

Thus, it can be concluded that AI-based translation tools have a significant role in improving the quality of writing. Student, but its use still requires control, Understanding, and a critical approach so as not to reduce thinking ability and language skills. Student.

B. Suggestion

Based on the result soft here search that has been conducted, there searcher provides several suggestions as follows:

1. For Students

Students are advised to use Artificial Intelligence (AI)-based translation tools wisely, as a learning aid, not as their sole source for writing. Students should practice understanding translations, double-checking them, and practicing writing independently to continuously develop their language skills.

2. For the Academic Community

Academic Community It is recommended to utilize technological developments, including AI-based translation tools, as part of innovation in learning. However, policies and guidelines for technology use are needed to prevent students from becoming dependent.

3. For Further Researchers

Future researchers are advised to expand this study to include more respondents, use different types of text, and compare more AI-based translation applications. Furthermore, future research could also examine the impact of AI on other aspects, such as critical thinking skills or overall writing skills.
